

Christopher “Chris” Plummer

Christopher “Chris” Plummer, President and Principal Consultant of ASK Development Solutions (ASK), graduated from U.W.I. in 1980 and had jobs at National Housing Trust, Family Planning Board, and then JAMPRO Ltd in housing and community development, and small business development. In 1989, he migrated with his family to the West Palm Beach area of Florida and continued that work administering federal grant programs under the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

After 15 years of administering federal grant programs and community development financing, Chris left the public and private sector work, and started ASK, a national consulting firm advising on all aspects of the community planning and development program delivery system across the country.

He has an undergraduate degree in Social Work, and Diploma in Management Studies from UWI and an M.S. in Social Administration (Community Development) from Case Western University, Ohio. He gives back to the younger generation as an adjunct professor in community development at Case Western Reserve and University of Michigan, two of the top ten social work programs. He is a minimalist in mindset and strongly believes in the principle of contentment as written by Paul in Philippians 4:12-13. He also believes many more families would be financially stable if they spent less than what they earn and made better decisions about money.
